First Place in Karate Competition

Brett Shumock, 13 year-old son of Raphael and Betty Shumock of Big Point, competed in the Pensacola, Florida Martial Arts Competition, November 16.

Brett is a Gold Belt student of Tae Kwon Do (Korean Karate) under the instruction of Mickey Ekornes, Second Dan Black Belt.

The competition was divided by age groups and not by rank. Brett won the first place trophy in fighting through the elimination of around twenty competitors of the age category 12-15 years, sparing students from blue belt to Black Belt rank.

Karate is the art of self-defense without a weapon with emphasis placed on self-discipline.

New Breed?

by Betty Shumock

Recently our dog, who is an avid hunter, bayed an animal late one night. My brave dad, armed with a "big stick" and light, decided to go investigate.

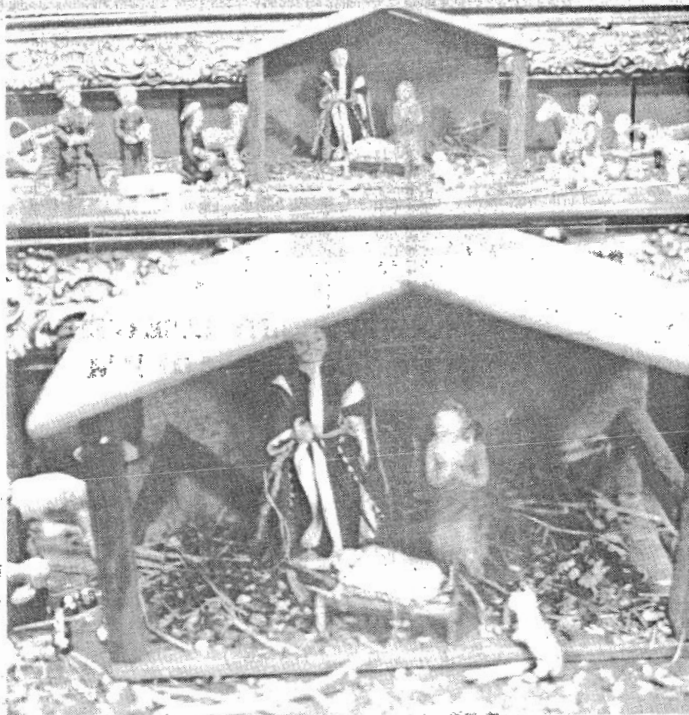

Upon coming to a brush pile, dad gave the dog a command to attack. The dog went into the thick underbrush but quickly came out with a large cat of a peculiar breed after him. The dog and cat fought only for a minute. The large cat ran free across the fields after leaving his marks on the dog.

The dog ran back to the brush pile and bayed again. This time when dad gave the command to attack, Mac, our dog, ran in and killed a cub the mother cat had left behind.

The cub was an off-white color with black on the ears, and black markings on his feet. He was striped like a bobcat around the face and legs. He had eyes the color of a bobcat but had a long persian-type tail. He had patches of smoke gray on his back similar to a siamese. The cub is twice the size of a domestic cat, and its mother was much larger.

Being a taxidermist, I mounted the cat so that we could preserve its appearance. Maybe someone can give us a name for this breed of cat. If so, write to "The Bulletin" P.O. box 367, Hurley, Ms. 39555. We would appreciate all the information you could give us.

Minature Nativity Hand Sculptered

by Betty Shumock

Hester Bates of Escatawpa has shown her interest in art since she was a student in high school. ~~Hester began her study of art beginning with a correspondence course in commercial art.~~ From the point on, art has come natural for her in many different areas.

While employed at the Sewing Basket in Pascagoula for six years she gained experience in tailoring. She furthered her education as a seamstress by learning the Bishop Method of tailoring.

Hester first began sculpturing when she became involved in ceramics ten years ago. She acquired some natural clay from Laurel, Ms. and began creating her own art pieces which she formed into vases and mushrooms.

Later Hester became interested in a new art using a polyform sculpture compound which can be baked in a home oven.

The minature Nativity Scene was hand sculptured using the polyform material and painted by Hester. Some of the minatures are no larger than one inch.

The finishing touch is added by Hester using oil paints for the facial details, but noted that many use acrylics for fast drying. Hester's seamstress capabilities added the fashions worn by the minature figures.

Pleasure—Or Work In Disguise?

By Betty Shumock

Recently my husband decided to take our family on a "mini-vacation". With one and a half days free, we headed for Destin, Florida on a deep sea fishing trip.

My husband, Raphael, had made reservations for us a week earlier for a half-day excursion, but to our amazement when we arrived we found that they had never heard of reservations for Shumock.

I have a very persevering husband and he continued along the docks until he found a charter boat for us to go out on, but we would be out all day instead of a half day.

After an hour heading out to open waters, myself never having been out before, discovered that we had JUST begun our trip. For three hours we traveled.

Soon they began to break out the rods-n-reels and squid for bait. I soon found out that when the boat stops and the captain sounds the horn it is time for you to drop your line.

As fast as we dropped the line we were pulling in red snapper. Just as I was getting into my fishing, after 10 to 15 minutes, the captain would blow that horn and it was on to the next.

After several hours of fishing I began to feel that there was a "battle" going on between me and the rod-n-reel I was "suppose" to be operating. By 5:00 p.m. that afternoon, hump-back and with my paralyzed arms dangling at my side, I could almost see that opened-faced reel grinning at me.

Returning to the docks at 5:30 that night, with our 150 pounds of red snapper, I was already looking ahead to some real tasty filet dinners. (Just as soon as I regained enough strength in those limp arms to cook them!)

FOX, raccoon, mink

Animals of the wild variety fail to disrupt family's Big Point home

By JONNY SCOTT

BIG POINT — Betty and Raphael Shumock have a duck that hangs out in the kitchen, a red fox that stays on their hearth, a mink on their end table and a couple of raccoons on their dining room wall.

The animals get along with one another without the least bit of trouble. They never have to be fed, taken to the vet, cleaned up after and they never act up.

That's because Betty, the family taxidermist, has mounted them so that they can be observed and enjoyed for years to come.

"Taxidermy has made me more appreciative of the birds and animals since I've gotten into it," Betty said as she sat in the Shumock living room. The room has pieces of her work placed here and there.

Taxidermy is still relatively new to Betty since she just finished her correspondence course in taxidermy last December. So she had only about half of a hunting season to get furs and birds. And she has used up nearly all of these.

Betty said she kind of got into it in a roundabout way. Her two sons, Randy, 14, and Brett, 11, were in school and didn't require as much of her time as they did a few years ago. She was spending a lot of time at the house by herself. "I was getting the housebound-humdrums," she said. "I was contemplating going back to college, to nursing school."

She thought about nursing school because she lacked only three months to finish. But, she also had a husband and two sons who like to hunt and trap.

Once a bird is skinned out, keep the skull and then build a body for it out of excelsior, Betty said. Excelsior is a fine straw which is wrapped tightly with twine to secure the animal's body. With the frame, wrap the skin around the body tightly and sew it up.

"When you get ready to attach the legs to the bird's body, you have to know where the legs go," Betty said. "The first one I did, I placed the legs too far back on the body. It looks like it's about to fall over." Betty keeps that one in a back room out of sight. "It takes experience to be really

"Raphael suggested I take a course in taxidermy, so I guess my husband really got me into it," Betty said. "And once I got into it, I found taxidermy is the most difficult thing I've attempted. It is tedious work and you have to be so careful."

When starting out in mounting animals, Betty said to always start with something small, like a bird. And it usually takes more than one bird before getting the hang of it. "I went through a dozen birds before I got a decent one."

"When you get ready to attach the legs to the birds body, you have to know where the legs go. The first one I did, I placed the legs too far back on the body. It looks like it's about to fall over."

Skinner and cleaning the animals she mounts would bother her more if it wasn't for Betty's ability of using "mind-over-matter."

Betty said, "If I allow myself to think about it, it would bother me. But, by using mind-over-matter, concentrating on my work, it doesn't bother me."

Taxidermy, the art or process of stuffing and mounting animal skins in lifelike form (as the dictionary puts it), was started in the 17th century and has continued to be improved on until today. The first taxidermist had to take a wire and literally sculpt a frame for the body.

"Most anything can be mounted, from bugs to bears and elephants."

Betty thinks that one reason taxidermy has become more popular recently is because more people are thinking about wildlife conservation and preservation. Hunters can bag only a small number of animals. So once they kill an animal, they think more about having it mounted and preserved through taxidermy.

About the only problem the Shumocks have encountered in relation to taxidermy is hanging on to the animals that Betty has mounted. Once people see how she is able to capture the animals in such life-like positions, they immediatly

Betty said. And they used wood for the skull. The preservatives used even 10 years ago faded the color of the furs a little bit as well.

Today, people are able to order a form (frame) for just about any animal. Nowasays it's just sew the skin around the form. And modern preservatives do not fade the colors of the furs and enables a mounted animal to last indefinitely if it is treated well, Betty said.

Taxidermy has become more widespread these days, said Betty.

seems as soon as we get 'em mounted, someone comes by and gets 'em," Raphael said.

30 Super gift from heaven

HURLEY—The setting was a quaint old toy shoppe on Christmas Eve. The shoppe was full of beautiful dolls of every description.

Raggedy Anns and Andys, clowns, toy soldiers, baby dolls, stuffed animals, and old fashioned dolls came to life to help explain the true meaning of the word gift to Freddie Freckles and Amanda.

"Super Gift From Heaven" was the name of the musical presentation by the second graders of the East Central Elementary grade school. All characters in the play were performed by the grade schoolers.

"We are very proud of the excellent job the children did in preparing for this program," Dinah Byrd, music director, said. "The songs and speaking parts were very difficult for this age group, but they mastered them beautifully. We have a very extraordinary group of second graders."

Lila Bonner, grade chairman, added, "We are very proud of the fact that all 130 students had a special part on the program. We feel that experiences of this nature make children feel good about themselves, which is something we as teachers strive to accomplish."

The leading roles of Freddie Freckles and Amanda were played by Rodney Hamilton and Julie Hulsey.

The second grade teachers are Mrs. Byrd, Mrs. Bonner, Gail Hendricks, Sally McKenna, Gina McDaniel, and Wendy Porter.

Others characters in the play included:

A massed arrangement of summer flowers accented with silver leaves and ribbons centered the tea table, which was bordered with English ivy. Guests were offered citrus fruit punch and an assortment of nuts and mints.

A four-tiered anniversary cake, iced with silver bells and roses and topped with a pair of love birds, was also cut and served.

A video record of the event was made by Jane Towery as a special gift to the couple.
